

The article contains the results on the growing and introduction of wild plants, harvested in different areas of the former Soviet Union. These plants were examined for the improvement of hayfields, pastures and battered agricultural lands. The preliminary conclusion is that plants tested have the economical significance.