

Some features of the development of the root system of spring wheat seedlings were studied. Varietal differences in the length of the main embryonic root length of the zone division and extension have been installed. The study can be used in practical plant breeding.