

The paper presents the results of studying the influence of five local rootstocks differing life form and degree of development of the tissues of the stem, on the growth and development of the cane part yearlings pears.