

The description and parameters of development of cells in nodes and internodes of the fifth phytomer of a shoot of spring wheat is presented. Distinctions in nodes and internodes of a stem are made on length, wall thickness, and pith diameter. In ontogeny of a wheat shoot the natural sequence of development of mechanical, vascular and epidermal tissues in a stem is observed.