

A comparative analysis of morphometric characteristics of Oxytropis uralensis fruits and seeds from natural populations of the South Ural was conducted. There was no significant differences in the value of the coefficient of variation between the populations. However the studied populations of O. uralensis have significant differences between length of stem, thickness of fruit, width of abdominal and spinal partition, seeds width and thousand seed mass.

